Driving is, for most of us, what psychologists call an overlearned activity. It is something we are so well ①practiced at that we are able to do it without much conscious thought. That makes our life easier, and it is ②how we become good at things. Think of an expert tennis player. A serve is a complex maneuver with many different components, but ③the better we become at it, the less we think of each individual step. One of the interesting things about learning and attention ④are that once something becomes automated, it gets executed in a rapid string of events. If you try to pay attention, you ⑤screw it up. This is why the best hitters in baseball do not necessarily make the best hitting coaches.
