특기자(영어) 면접고사 문제

<문제>

The sheer normality of most of those who participated in the Holocaust has led us to argue that when placed in particular circumstances, ordinary human beings are indeed capable of acting with atrocious inhumanity. Varying degrees of racism can combine with a range of other factors to create the conditions for various forms of genocide. Moreover, modern democratic industrial culture not only does not prevent their occurrence, it may actively enable them to be conceived and carried out. The violence can be authorized by legally entitled officials, and the victims can be ideologically dehumanized by modern scientific doctrines. This interpretation of the Holocaust also raises fundamental issues about the way in which individuals can live with radically different ethical codes, indeed separate "moral universes". It seems to be only too possible for people to be loving parents, dedicated scientists, and mass murderers at the same time.
